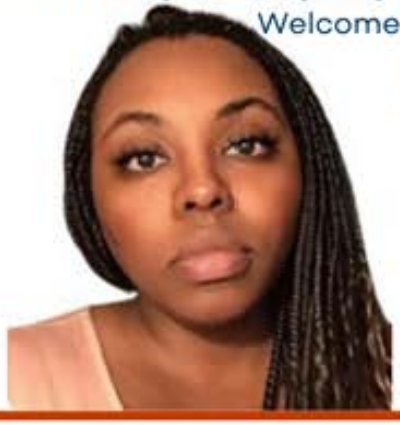
NORAPC UPDATES

NORAPC launched its Data Storytelling for Cultural Creatives training series to help community members, Planning Council members, and partners turn data into clear, meaningful stories that people can understand and use. The training focuses on making public health and Ryan White Part A planning information more engaging by connecting numbers to lived experience, local context, and community voice. Participants explored how data can be used to support PSRA, create infographics and other communication tools, and strengthen outreach by explaining not just what the numbers say, but why they matter.



Welcome new NORAPC team member, Heather Moore, the new Planning and Training Coordinator! Originally from Agana, Guam, Heather grew up in a Navy family and developed a deep appreciation for people, culture, and storytelling through her travels and experiences living abroad. After studying English in college and exploring a variety of industries across the United States, she built a background in writing, marketing, and creative ventures. Heather recently is drawn to New Orleans by the city's vibrant culture and community, and is excited to support NORAPC's planning and training efforts while continuing to connect with and serve the people of the region.
